Business Continuity Management: 'How to stay in business in the event of a disaster'

16.00 to 19.00, Tuesday 7 July 2009

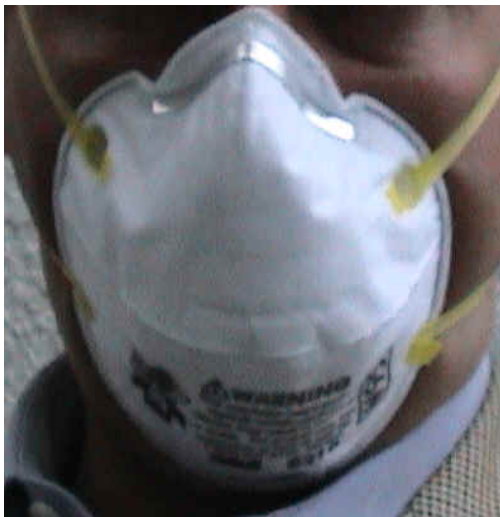

The principles of Business Continuity Management (BCM) were developed 20 years ago but it is only recently that it has been recognised as an important tool in enabling organisations to manage through disruptive incidents. Three experts within this field will clarify the importance of creating and validating a practiced logistical plan in order for an organisation to recover and restore after a disaster or extended disruption.

The event will make use of the results from the latest piece of research by the Chartered Management Institute, 'A Decade of Living Dangerously', focusing on the:

- growth of BCM in the UK and worldwide
- current drivers for BCM
- status of BCM in UK organisations
- development of BCM standards

In addition, you'll have the opportunity to ask advice and gain recommendations from a senior representative at an organisation that's been through a disaster, plus hear from author and consultant, Andy Osborne, who manages the independent consultancy practice, Acumen, which specialises in Business Continuity and Risk Management.

This event welcomes both IBC members and non-members equally.

- Date: Tuesday 7 July 2009
- Start Time: 16.00 registration and networking, 16.30 start
- Finish Time: The Forum will end around 19.00, followed by networking with refreshments and nibbles
- Venue: The National Motorcycle Museum
